Preface

I realised I could use the sounds of a Polish man speaking to write poetry in English. This was the seed of the idea of The Homophone Translator. As a basis for the translation project, I wrote a short story, Silver Linear Cloud, in English. Then, I asked several competent translators to translate one or more of the nine sections of the story into other languages. I provided recordings of the English sections and they returned recordings of their language translation.

Once I received the foreign language translations, I “homophonically” translate the recorded words back into English. To do this, I listened to the sounds repeatedly until English words or sounds emerged I was interested in the process of constructing new poems, being inspired by sounds, rather than following the stereotypical path of seeing translation as an accurate transportation of meaning.

Silver Linear Cloud

1:

Thoughts. Of pick pockets, stomach lining, golden ; crow.
In the distance (picking away the petals). Brought me eyes; a view.
Due date. By Tree. Meet me there.
When taking the apple for a crunch, mouth opens up like arms of nature.
Communication. . . on the transmission. Receiving end lends base to throat.

2:

Plant a pip in a field. A body of a world. Upon earth,, trek the tumour of trench, the forestry speaks in pretty deep chatters. Awake eyes, sense urge; a shape creates many patterns.
Energetic tribes arise a sun to form a glaze upon the eyes as 'just woke up', from the dark.

3:

Birds a pear, softly does it. "Swoop", the leaves, don't leave me here. Nest is cold, abandoned.
Mother of Earth has been called to protest the summit. Sink not basin tears, away from puddles.
Eye lets out and up-sticks to a new scene.
Because the branches are broken and the living, gone starved.

4:

Oh pretty, hold your tongue. It's stable. Even the surface is dry. Go take a swim in the ocean;;
full of chemicals and beer cans and trolleys and also trolled tourists on cruises. Make a wreck, tongue tied,, leave be lost for world and world. Space be shun, and lonely I am to gather fires and burn all inner scents; they smell for.

5:

Because they feast with their eyes and try to hunt the horns.
Because they are horny for gold.
I could bank on it, and they probably plan to do this as well.
We spit the rancid taste away and see the swallowing's mid swoop,, under the clouds.
Look up again, to hope: a seagull comes by and gives you luck or even 'look'.

6:

Or to even steal your food at coast side. Because you always carried a chip on the shoulder.
Rest the head now; on few stones; knocked out with, thinking of those places far away.
Implanted asteroids — Do you believe in sacrifice? My tiny little child's of the world will draw a better place for us. Let's colour the houses lavender, smell of; under pillow.
Rest now, we are to travel and transcend.

7:

In come the cranes. RAM BULL! Dozen,, dose off now — past cocoa and cockatoo.
The florist awaits a real travel. Forwards through vortex. Speak voices of the unknown.
So much their vibrations tickle you. And the daisies upon the chin give you allergy.
Irregular sneezing saturates, many cars used to pass, and cough grey clouds.
The kaleidoscope suggests we head left. The troops grab bags and take the turn.

8:

Away from the lay figure, upright; sat pianist who serenades us as we pass his bush. The 'must dash' language makes us look ignorant. Little attention paid, laid the lanterns to govern us.
WATCH OUT! WE ARE ABOUT TO HIT BRICKS. WATCH OUT! We have driven the oil hole too deep. Out of talk, out of forest. . . because now we are in the grey world where the people pass and the rain falls and the people sigh.

9:

A mad-hatter comes and dances in the puddles. Merry thoughts and tribulations. The mesh suggest too much fun is being had. So they declare a smile as being illegal but grant the use of plants legal due to the gold eggs can be laid. And charged with wrong words. I state it is ONLY the artificial and chemical, and world — ruin plants that they are in favour.
The real is too rich that it is worthless. So the flower in you wilts; being starved of good life.
